There is a close link between the images above. Each is home to a variety of plants and species, but no two are the same. Although they're all habitable to life, these biomes have quite a lot of differences too. Many of these differences are abiotic, or non-living. They include the amount of sunlight, the amount of oxygen in the air or water, and the kind of soil present.

infer, or make your best guess, about some of the abiotic factors in each of the images:

Location	Temperature	Amount of rainfall

Similarly, these locations are all home to many skottle, or living, factions as well.

What kinds of species do you think live in each of these places? Feel free to use any of the species in the Species list, or even make up your own!

Location	Species Living There

Lastly, the chaparral biome is a coastal biome with hot, dry summers and mild winters. It has mostly shrubs with a few short trees. Deer, birds, and rabbits live in the chaparral.

place, but did you know that deserts can be coast too? The Sahara Desert in Africa is the largest hot desert, but Antarctica is the largest cold desert. In fact, there is so little rain (or snow) that it's still considered a desert. Both plants and animals must adapt to dry life in the desert. Many animals undergo hibernation, which allows them to conserve energy and to hibernate dormant (similar to hibernation) for a long time.

The rainforest is most likely the most famous forest. This lush habitat stays warm and wet all year long. Yearly rainfall can average up to 3,000 cm (400 inches)! Rainforest are home to a broad range of plants and animals as food is rarely hard to find in this abundant ecosystem. Here you can find parrots, sloths, and

The Red-breasted Noddy is common in the U.S., Canada, Europe, and Africa. It is found in the West Indies, the Caribbean, and the Gulf of Mexico. It is a large bird, with a wingspan of 1.5 m (5 ft). It has a long, straight bill, and a large, dark, patchy area on its forehead. It is a very noisy bird, and is often heard calling out to its mate or to its young. It is a very social bird, and is often seen in large groups. It is a very hardy bird, and is able to survive in a wide range of environments. It is a very common bird, and is often seen in the wild.

Earth is an amazing planet. It has many different environments that make perfect homes for millions of species. The largest major habitats that exist worldwide are known as biomes. Most likely, you're already familiar with many of these: desert, rainforest, grassland, etc. Each biome is unique and therefore essential to sustaining the life that calls it home. Conservation of all habitats is crucial for maintaining the variety of life that makes our Earth so abundant in wonder and natural resources.

How many biomes are there? Do all water environments constitute a single aquatic biome? Are all trees and conifers considered a forest biome? The number of biomes you split the world into simply depends on how specific you'd like to be. Let's take a look at some of the largest biomes, and the abiotic and biotic factors that define them.
