Effect size and what is considered an adequate effect size (Cohen, 1988) are important issues in the design of a study. Cohen (1988) defines three levels of effect size: small, medium, and large. A small effect size is defined as a correlation coefficient of 0.1, a medium effect size as a correlation coefficient of 0.3, and a large effect size as a correlation coefficient of 0.5. Cohen (1988) also provides guidelines for the interpretation of effect sizes in regression analysis. A small effect size is defined as a beta weight of 0.1, a medium effect size as a beta weight of 0.3, and a large effect size as a beta weight of 0.5. Cohen (1988) also provides guidelines for the interpretation of effect sizes in ANOVA. A small effect size is defined as a partial eta squared of 0.01, a medium effect size as a partial eta squared of 0.04, and a large effect size as a partial eta squared of 0.09.
